One Month without Television & Movies

Sometimes, it's the things we think that are the most expendable that prove to be the most difficult to give up. Little did I know what I was getting myself into on January 1, 2014.

A full month has passed since I made the promise to myself to stave off the television shows and the Netflix movie marathons, the documentaries and the infomercials. A full month later and I find that everything has changed. I'm employed, working for the company I've dreamed of working with for years, I've nearly written 20,000 words of the book that I feel has been living inside of me my entire adult life and I'm completely disconnected from the mindless shows that I used to find myself watching on a daily basis.
